THE EVENING STAR FOR WOMEN READERS

There is greater danger to the scalp from over frequency of shampooing than from washing it too seldom. If the hair is carefully brushed each day with a brush having long bristles, a large amount of dust and oil is removed in the process and the scalp is likely to be in a fairly healthy condition. The injury from washing too often lies in the fact that natural oils are then dried and the hair becomes either lifeless and dull, easily falling out, or the pores are overstimulated and the head becomes oily and the hair heavy with grease.

Same shampoo can no more be used promiscuously than a tonic. What is suited to one scalp might be harmful to another. The wash must be chosen with regard to whether the head is dry or oily. When it is only an excellent cleansing lotion is made from one quart of bay rum, one-half pint each of alcohol and water, one-half ounce of tincture of cantharides and carbonate of potash, and one-quarter of an ounce of carbonate of ammonia. The last two ingredients are dissolved in water before the others are added. Mixing is done by shaking. This is bottled and applied by dropping the lotion gently over the scalp, first parting the hair often so that the skin shall be reached. The head is finally to be made wet with this, and then vigorously massaged. The shampoo dries in, when it is washed out in clear, warm water, using no soap.

When the scalp is dry, an egg and soap shampoo suits it better than anything else. Half of an ordinary cake of gossamer palm oil soap is dissolved in a pint of boiling water, keeping it hot until the soap is dissolved. The liquid is then poured into a large wooden glass jar, and when cold, to use, a raw egg is beaten into each tablespoonful of soap jelly, and a spoonful of water is added. This is thoroughly massaged over the head before washing. When the hair is decidedly blonde, the white of eggs should be used, as the yolks are darkening.

Always after shampooing the scalp is dry and this is the secret of the hair being unmanageable then. When the head is inclined to overdryness a little grease of olive oil should be rubbed in. One suited to this, as it is tonic, is made from one and one-half ounces of coconut oil, two and one-quarter drams of tincture of nuxvomica, one ounce of bay rum and twenty drops of oil of bergamot. This is well mixed and rubbed into the scalp with the finger tips, dividing the hair close together so that the locks themselves shall be thoroughly oiled.

MARGARET MIXTER.

Fads for Women.

One is always looking for new ideas in making up lingerie frocks, so a detail of a very pretty dress may be interesting. The noticeable feature was the founce. It was deep, reaching to the knees. The lower edge was finished with a half-inch hem and a group of tucks the same depth. Above this was a row of val insertion and then another group of tucks one-quarter inch wide. Insertion again and a third group of pin tucks. The upper edge was gathered. The waist and sleeves carried out the tucking idea, but the founce was certainly very pretty.

I saw a very pretty frock in shirred princess effect recently that any girl who can sew could make for herself. The material was navy blue and white dotted voile combined with plain blue. The dress was shirred on groups of tucks to form a bolero effect, and again at the waist line and at knee depth. The hem was finished with a row of tucks and a band of blue finished the top of the gown and the skirt. The sleeves were shirred, the remaining portions being of the check running around the arms.

One of the most effective make-believes or cover-ups in millinery that I have seen this season was brought about by the use of white net veiling dotted with black chenille an inch or more apart. The hat was of white chip and the trimmings had been made of the same material. One easily have believed that it was still immaculate after a square of the net had been placed over the entire hat and caught under the brim. The veil was of the same net, and the effect was not only dainty, but striking.

There is no smarter wrap for younger women's wear at seaside, lake or mountain than the reefer coat made from a light-weight woolen checked material. Now that the one-piece dresses are so much worn the short, loosely fitting reefer is just the thing for warmth. A wide band of white trimmings, a row of buttons of white check, trimmed with white plaques collar and cuffs and gilt buttons over her frock of white plaid, looking charming, and have in mind a handsome bralette in a pretty gray linen frock with a reefer of white and gray checked goods, the trimmings white suede and gilt buttons.

Elderly women who prefer bonnets to hats sometimes find it difficult to find pleasing models. At a store I saw recently some very pretty and smart-looking bonnets. One was of braided net, black, draped softly over the crown, and coronet trimmed with a bunch of dainty white flowers from which ran a black tulle. The strings were of good ribbon. Another was of white Tessa draped, covered with a black net. The left side was trimmed with black silk roses and lilies of the valley. Black roses also held the strings at the back.

A smart-looking and serviceable hat for summer wear by a small girl of 8 or 9. A straw hat in a burnt color, hand-pressed. It is in a shady, mushroom shape with a wide brim. The crown is of a light color, and the sides are of a darker shade. The crown is tied into a bow on either side.

Remnants of fine embroidery in lawns and batistes, that can be picked up cheaply just now, make up into dainty laces for infants' wear. I saw a coat not long ago that was fashioned from a remnant of flouncing and a short length of covin material. At the top of the design in the embroidery the surface was dotted, and the same kind of dotted pattern was used for the collar and cuffs. That sold by the yard. This was used for the yoke and sleeves, the former supporting the dotted pattern, the latter the flouncing gathered at the top. The whole was lined with white China silk.

Isn't it singular that, while women would consider it the height of bad taste to wear rings over their gloves, yet many of the well-dressed women do not hesitate to clasp one or more bracelets on the wrists after the gloves are doffed. I suppose some will say that long gloves will not fit well if the bracelet is worn underneath. In that case, leave it at home. I am speaking in regard to bracelets worn for general and stooping.

Pretty stockings in great variety are to be found at low prices—dainty hose in tan or white lisle thread, prettily embroidered in self tones, the designs both neat and attractive. Then there are plain, very fine lisse thread hose imparted with spliced heels and double toes in colors of pink, pale blue, violet, cardinals, canary and gold. As a third choice there are imported stockings in black, daintily finished with white lisse thread. Lastly, there is a gauge weight in tan only made with garter tops, double heels and toes.

A most delightful trimming for restoring a half-worn or shabby hat can be made by any girl who can sew and be patient. It takes the form of a very large bow fashioned from black marquis. The material is made of a very fine lisse thread, an inch or so from the edge of each loop. The wire is covered with rows of tiny rosebuds in pink or any dainty color. A fold of Persian is also very effective. The bow can be added with a few strong stitches.

Gum Chewing Dangerous.

To the dangers of swimming has been added a new one—the growth of a habit of chewing gum.

The habit obtains little among women who wish to keep their cheeks unwrinkled and their jaws unhardened, but most women who aspire to swimming forget their habit.

Physicians have found the contrary to be true, says an English exchange. They have noticed that women remain cooler when they refrain from keeping their jaws working. When women take to the water, the buffeting of the waves sometimes causes the gum to become lodged in their throats and fatal accidents have been traced to the practice. Long distance swimmers like Lady Constance Richardson never chew gum when in the water. Even for those who hang to the ropes in the surf the chewing of gum is fraught with danger.

One of the qualities of the late King Edward which every writer has emphasized is the great tact possessed by the dead monarch; it stood him in good stead in every delicate and difficult position, and it won for him the affection and admiration of all, says Home Notes. It must, therefore, be apparent to every one that to possess tact is a matter of great importance, and with that thought must come the inquiry whether it is possible to increase our own individual tactfulness.

Some say that the tactful person is born, not made; yet this cannot be true, for we know that experience increases the quality. It would be more true and incidentally more satisfactory to the late king to say that constant attention to detail, constant thoughtfulness about one's conduct, and the desire to please others, develop the quality of tactfulness.

Germany is no longer the land of thinkers and poets—it is a nation of business men.

Now is the Land of "Business and Battleships."

So says the aged German writer in commenting upon the transition of the country from the days of the Goethes, the Schopenhauers, and the Nietzsches to the age of the Ballins, whose ships engirdle the globe, the Krupps, who arm the nation; the Gwinns, whose electrical devices have made alive the jungles of Africa and India. The German business methods have made Germany a nation of business.

THE GERMAN ADVANCE

XIII. German Business Methods.

By FREDERIC J. HASKIN

BERLIN, August 4.—The German business man brings to the solution of the everyday problems of his affairs an equipment of technical education, disciplinary orderliness, dogged determination and unflagging industry not possessed by his British or American rival. He rises at 6 o'clock, has his simple breakfast of coffee and rolls, and is at work as soon as he can reach the office or factory, never later than 8 o'clock. He has his second breakfast, sandwich, in his pocket, and he eats it some time between 10 and 11, wherever he may happen to be. At 1 o'clock he goes home, if he is a family man, not for his lunch, but for his dinner, the largest meal of the day. He eats this with his family leisurely, afterward lies down for a short nap. When he awakes he has a cup of coffee and a cigar, and then goes back to the office and is at his desk by 3 o'clock. And there he will stay until his work is finished, having coffee at 5, even if he is a family man. Then he goes home, has his supper and goes to bed.

The long midday rest seems odd to Americans with the quick-living habit, of nine to twelve working hours each day. This is the daily program of the German. His clerks follow the same routine, except that they may not have a cup of coffee and a cigar, and they may not have a short nap. They are expected to stay at their work until it is finished, without regard to the coming of night.
